Artcirq is the story of a collective of young Canadian Inuit performers who make up the world's only Arctic circus, and their journey from obscurity to the worldwide stage at the 2010 Winter Olympic Games. It's also the story of the community of Igloolik where suicide takes too many lives, especially youth, and a Montreal acrobat with a childhood connection to the place, who drops everything to start a circus, engage the young people and give them hope. In just 10 years they've gone from clumsy novices to accomplished acrobats, and transformed their lives. The news of the Olympics has given a heightened sense of purpose to their lives, invigorated this overlooked, impoverished community, and opened these performers up to self-expression as they struggle to adjust to a post-nomadic way of life.
